FROM THE NTM PRESIDENT

CATHY ALLSHOUSE

When people think of intelligence, they usually think of IQ—the ability to reason, analyze, and solve problems. For Mensa members, these abilities are familiar territory. Yet many of life's greatest challenges involve something different: understanding and managing emotions. That's Emotional Intelligence--the other kind of smart. Emotional intelligence (EI) refers to the ability to recognize, understand, and effectively use emotions in ourselves and others. While IQ may help us solve complex problems, emotional intelligence helps us navigate relationships, communicate effectively, and respond constructively to stress and conflict, all of which may be even more important.

Researchers often describe emotional intelligence in four areas:
Self-awareness is the ability to recognize our own emotions and understand how they influence our thoughts and actions.
Self-management involves regulating emotions rather than being controlled by them. It includes resilience, adaptability, and the ability to remain calm under pressure.
Social awareness is the capacity to understand the feelings and perspectives of others. Empathy is a key component of this skill--SO very important.
Relationship management involves using emotional understanding to communicate effectively, resolve conflicts, and build positive relationships.

One common misconception is that high IQ naturally leads to high emotional intelligence. In reality, the two are distinct abilities. Someone may excel at analytical thinking while struggling with interpersonal communication, while another person may have exceptional emotional insight despite average cognitive ability.

In professional settings, emotional intelligence often becomes a differentiating factor. During my business career, I have learned that while technical expertise may open doors, collaboration, leadership skill and managing disagreements effectively often determines one's success.

For intellectually gifted individuals, emotional intelligence offers an opportunity for growth beyond traditional measures of intelligence. It does not replace cognitive ability; it complements it. The most effective problem-solvers are often those who understand both systems and people. After all, some of the most challenging puzzles we encounter are not technical problems—they are human ones.

GIFTED YOUTH CORNER

by Bill Rock

We had a small but enthusiastic group that came out to the Frontiers of Flight Museum in May. The flying pancake was just as weird in person as you might expect.

For this month, we're going to do a summer activity (because the tour is not open on weekends). The Bureau of Engraving and Printing over in Fort Worth is one of two places in the country where cash is printed. They have a cool museum on how the printing process has evolved over time, and a walkway over the presses where you can see how to "make money" in the literal sense. Afterwards, those that want to can join us for dinner before we head back to the Dallas area.

As part of a help to get to know your neighbor process, here is a chart indicating how many Gifted Youth members we have, in several zip codes. I would be happy to send out targeted messages if you wanted plan a "more local" group meeting sometime.

As always, please let me know if you have an idea for an event or want to host an event. It is easy and (mostly) painless

2:30 PM Theodore Talk: Born Smart or Built Smart? The Truth About Intelligence and Effort.
This virtual event will take place on Zoom July 26 at 2:30 p.m. Central Time. Alexander Puutio, Adjunct Professor at Columbia University and author of the new book AI for MBAs: The Essential Guide for Leaders Building AI-Driven Enterprise, will explore the critical distinction between being "born smart" and being "built smart." He will also examine how curiosity, metacognition, resilience, and deliberate practice shape effective intelligence, often outweighing genetic endowment. By looking at how individuals and organizations foster, or sabotage, their own cognitive performance, we can identify the tools and environments that maximize human potential. For Mensa members in particular, the opportunity lies in shifting the conversation from static measures of IQ to dynamic strategies for making intelligence count in the world.

NEW SIG ANNOUNCEMENT!
"RETIRED AND INSPIRED"

Being newly retired, I am starting up a new special interest group for our retired NTM members who seek intellectually rewarding--and fun!--activities. We would do varying types of outings and activities, usually on a weekday afternoon (also low cost!), to keep us mentally challenged and socially connected with our peers. Both of those things are vital for staying cognitively vibrant. I envision museum outings, programs at libraries, musical programs, movie matinees, perhaps some affordable restaurants, etc. For those of you who are interested, on Wednesday July 22nd at 2pm, let's meet for a planning session at the Panera Bread at 7839 Park Ln, in Dallas, near Northpark Mall. Spouses welcome. Bring ideas!
Contact: Cathy Allshouse at callshouse1@aol.com

VOLUNTEER OPORTUNITY

Lauren Ogden, our current Scholarship Chair, has expressed a desire to step away from that role, so we need to recruit a new Scholarship Chair. Here's what she said about that: "I've enjoyed bringing our chapter into the online scholarship judging process. However, I am ready to pass the role on to the next new Chair. The Chair role consists of just recruiting judges. Lauren is willing to train the next Chair as needed! Would you be interested in the role? The process starts in September, and runs through January; it only takes a few hours a month.
